Jordan S. Orange, MD, PhD

An international leader and renowned researcher in pediatrics, Jordan S. Orange, MD, PhD, has been named Pediatrician-in-Chief at NewYork-Presbyterian Morgan Stanley Children's Hospital and Chair of the Department of Pediatrics at Columbia University Vagelos College of Physicians and Surgeons. He is responsible for growing NewYork-Presbyterian's pediatric programs, and looks forward to strengthening the focus on personalized medicine and expanding child health-oriented research to develop innovative treatments.

Dr. Orange has more than 15 years of experience in pediatric immunology and an extensive background in pediatric primary immunodeficiency, spending much of his career identifying a class of diseases called natural killer cell deficiencies. His research is dedicated to uncovering the cause of these disorders, identifying new diseases, and improving diagnosis and treatment.

Dr. Orange has been continuously funded by the National Institutes of Health, published more than 250 papers, and received many awards, including the 2017 E. Mead Johnson Award from the Society for Pediatric Research and the 2018 Edith and Peter O'Donnell Award in Medicine from the Texas Academy in Medicine, Engineering and Science. He joins NewYork-Presbyterian from Baylor College of Medicine at Texas Children's Hospital in Houston, where he served as Professor and Vice Chair for Research in Pediatrics.
